

A Final Report on the Special and Urgent Needs – Irene Recovery Fund

June 2012

Irene's Impact On Vermont's Nonprofit Sector

From the moment that Tropical Storm Irene struck, Vermont's nonprofits have been at the forefront of the state's recovery process, helping residents who were affected by the storm and serving as key partners in the rebuilding of their towns; many of these organizations worked around the clock to meet a surge in demand for their services even as they recovered from damage to their own facilities.

The Community Foundation recognized that in order to provide relief to residents in the most affected parts of the state, many nonprofits serving those areas were going to need emergency funding to maintain or increase their services and repair the damage they had sustained. The Foundation established the Special and Urgent Needs (SUN)–Irene Recovery Fund for this purpose, modeled after the Foundation's original SUN Fund, which for six years has provided quick grants to nonprofits for unanticipated needs.

Information about the availability of grants was disseminated online and through the media. The SUN–Irene Recovery Fund featured a simple application and a fast turnaround on grant decisions, which were made by a committee composed of Foundation staff. The fund's first grants were awarded the week of October 2, roughly one month after the storm and two weeks after applications were made available.

Foundation staff began to realize that some of the most critical on-the-ground work was increasingly being administered by local community relief funds and programs that offered financial assistance to individuals and families affected by the storm. Because those local funds and programs were often formed by—or affiliated with—local nonprofits, they too were subsequently allowed to apply for funding.

What The Fund Was Able To Accomplish

Thanks to the generosity of donors from across Vermont and beyond, the SUN–Irene Recovery Fund collected $417,554 in seven months, including $100,000 gifts from TransCanada and the band Phish's WaterWheel Fund for Vermont Flood Recovery.

The fund awarded its final grants to community organizations in May. Altogether, 84 nonprofit organizations, schools, and municipal entities were awarded grants totaling $417,020. A small portion of the funds raised ($534) covered third-party gift processing fees.

In the Foundation's conversations with nonprofits after the storm, two emerging needs in the statewide recovery process became evident. First, as immediate needs like shelter, food, and infrastructure were dealt with, some Vermonters turned their focus to addressing the long-term psychological effects of the storm. For example, the SUN–Irene Recovery Fund awarded a grant to support expanded hours for an elementary school guidance counselor to work with students affected by the flood, as well as a grant to support a mental health clinic facing a spike in demand for its services.

Home Share Now received a grant from the fund to support the increased staff time necessary to facilitate home sharing matches for individuals and families displaced by the storm.

Second, it became clear that the 14 long-term recovery groups, which have been tasked with spearheading regional recovery, are strapped for resources. These groups were often formed by nonprofit, municipal, and community leaders with a detailed understanding of area needs and a commitment to rebuilding their towns. In response, the SUN-Irene Recovery Fund awarded grants to nine of these regional recovery groups in amounts proportionate to local impact and remaining need. When awarding these grants, the committee was mindful of those areas that sustained damage from the storm but which, for any number of reasons, had not submitted as many applications for assistance, such as Rutland, Windham, and Addison Counties.

Looking Forward: Where We Go From Here

The Foundation remains committed to supporting long-term community recovery. If your organization is struggling to recover from the storm, we encourage you to take a look at our list of statewide Irene recovery resources on www.vtfloodresponse.org.

Although Irene devastated many organizations and affected hundreds of nonprofits, it is apparent that long-term good has come out of the recovery process. Strong new partnerships have emerged between nonprofits, residents, and municipalities; and communities across the state have renewed their commitment to support the integral work of nonprofits.

Thank you to everyone who made this work possible. And in the words of one nonprofit that received a grant from the fund, “Although there is still much work to be done, we have made tremendous progress in the clean-up effort. [...] Your support means the world to us.”

SUN-Irene Recovery Grant Awards by County

*Category includes several grants awarded to organizations that serve multiple counties, including Addison, Bennington, Orange, Rutland, Windham, and Windsor Counties, among others.
